

Job Vacancy: Researcher in Banking and Financial Law

Professor Matthias Lehmann, Chair of Private International and Comparative Law at the University of Vienna, seeks a highly skilled and ambitious research fellow (“prae-doc”).

The successful candidate will hold a first law degree from any jurisdiction, possess an excellent command of English, and have a basic knowledge of German. Knowledge of other languages and advanced IT skills are desirable qualities that may be taken into consideration.

The position is available in the area of international commercial law, with the ideal candidate having firm knowledge or background in banking and financial law (further details here).

The selected fellow will be given the opportunity to complete a PhD (in English or German) or conduct post-doctoral research in accordance with the Faculty’s regulations. Other responsibilities include teaching, and supporting Professor Lehmann in his work at the Chair.

The position involves 30 hours per week, of which 10 hours are set aside for the individual PhD project, and are remunerated according to the Austrian public salary scale (around 2.200 Euro gross per month, rising to 2.600 Euro after 3 years, 14 salaries per year). Contracts are for an initial term of 1,5 years, starting 1 October 2021 or later, with an automatic extension to four years unless the professor submits a declaration of non-renewal within the first year. The candidate has the option to terminate the contract at any time.

Applications (including a covering letter in German or English, a cv, and relevant diploma) should be submitted via the University of Vienna’s Job Centre portal (<http://jobcenter.univie.ac.at>) no later than 26 September 2021. Please include reference number 12330. Questions about the position can be addressed to emerik.prevost@univie.ac.at.
